Abstract: The article looks at one of the key aspects of ensuring security in the European Union, namely societal security. It presents the threats and challenges of multicultural identity formation in the context of the European integration process. In their context, it is concluded that modern European society is facing a new image of the process of constructing the European space. It is pointed out that the stabilizing factor for European security is the institutions that are not only the support of the emerging new European transnational multicultural identity, but they also represent a guarantee for social security.

Key words: societal security, identity, European institutions.
